In Rojava (Northern Syria), in the midst of a raging war, a society based on the values of women's liberation, radical democracy, and ecology is being built. In early 2018, we, people from across the world, launched the campaign 'Make Rojava Green Again' in co-operation with the newly-established local autonomies to help find solutions to the vast destruction of nature that has resulted from decades of colonialism, capitalism, and war.

Out first major project is to participate in reforestation across the region. The Syrian regime razed the forests of Rojava to develop a wheat monoculture, even forbidding the growing of fruit or trees in many parts of Northern Syria. The consequences have been disastrous. Soil quality has plummeted while fertiliser and water usage has grown immensely, and in a part of the world where both are scarce.

Reforestation is our main weapon in the fight against desertification. It will improve soil quality, increase water retention in soils, and foster biodiversity.

Where nature is destroyed, so society is destroyed.
It is time to Make Rojava Green Again!

In co-operation with the local administrations of Rojava we will plant thousands of trees, mainly in the Hayaka Nature Reserve, West of Derîk (Qamişlo Region). In order to do so we will establish a new tree nursery, run as a co-operative by internationalists and the local population.

This is just one of our many projects and plans. You can find out more about our activities, analyses and ideas in our book, in both print form and at makerojavagreenagain.org.

To finance all of this we depend on donations.
